Chiang Rai Province's Customs Department in Mae Sai has incinerated illegal and fake items valued at over 11 million baht.

The illegal items are goods that "do not follow the customs law of Thailand", aka guns ,fakes and brand copies. Most of the items were seized from the Thai-Burmese Border Gate in Mae Sai.

The illegal goods were gathered and burned at the district waste disposal centre in Mae Sai. Illegal goods continue to be a big issue of Thai authorities. Officials say that many sellers are turning to e-commerce to sell the products. Popular illegal goods sold online include fake designer bags, fake makeup, and fake perfume. The products are often sold on Instagram, Facebook and Line.

Other items that went up in smoke include illegal supplements – diet pills, medical creams, hair dye, hair products – mobile phones, pirated goods, patent infringement products, and more. One of the most popular goods seized at the border are fake designer handbags, fake jewelry, and even fake pajamas using famous brands such as Mickey Mouse.

The total value of the bonfire was of 11,098,872 baht according to Virot Yaibuathet from the Customs Department.

Phra That Choeng Chum was built in the 17th century, the time of the Ayutthaya Kingdom. The Lao style slender chedi set on a square base is 24 meters high and topped with a multi tiered solid gold umbrella. The brick tower shaped in the form of an angled lotus bud was built over the spot of the Buddha footprints.

According to the legend of Urangkathat, an ancient chronicle, the four incarnations of the Buddha came to press their footprint at this location. It is believed that the fifth, yet to come Buddha, will also come to press his footprint into the soil at this spot. The chedi was built over a much smaller Khmer prang.

The Khmer laterite prang dates from the 10th century when Sakhon Nakhon was an important town of the Khmer empire. Khmer script on the entrance can still be seen that tells about the history of the prang.

Inside the temple's viharn are several rows of white pillars supporting the roof. Opposite the entrance is the Luang Phor Phra Ong Saen Buddha, an image cast in the Chiang Saen style in 1257. Behind the Buddha is a large arched door leading to a small room where several old Buddha images and relics are enshrined behind a fence.

Also on the grounds are a number of stones in the shape of large canon balls. These are the luuk nimit, that are usually buried in the ground under the sema stones, that mark the sacred area of the ubosot (ordination hall). Other temple structures are an ubosot and a well with a large five headed Naga serpent wrapped around it.
